

WHAT GRANGERS WANT

Farmers' Association Petitions Congress.

LEGISLATION THEY ADVOCATE.

Rural Mail Delivery, Antitrust Laws and Protection of Dairy Products, Fortifications at Esquimault-Montgomery's Idea.

Pensacola, March 27.—[Special.] A week or two past congress has been flooded with petitions from Grangers all over the country. While Grangers may not be as powerful a force in legislation as it was 15 or 20 years ago, it still has considerable influence, as all congressmen recognize. It is the most stable farmers' association that exists. While it has never shaped the political importance of the Farmers' Alliance, because it has been distinctly political, the influence of the legislation of the Grange has been much greater than the Alliance. Legislation controlling railroads in the past was designated "Granger." When legislation was carried to the Supreme Court, the opinions were known and are still called the "Granger decisions." It is quite probable that the Grange will continue to have a considerable influence on the legislation of the country. It is interesting to note what the Granges throughout the country want. The petitions presented show a concentrated movement. The Granges want the election of United States senators by a direct vote of the people, the extension of the rural free delivery mail service, the enactment of adequate antitrust laws, laws to secure protection against shoddy manufactured goods, the construction of the Nicaragua canal, the establishment of postal savings banks, the construction of reservoirs or irrigating canals for the irrigation of arid lands, legislation to protect the people against adulterated foods and legislation regulating the sale of dairy products.

Two Railroad Men.

There were recently in Washington two railroad men who were for years associated in western railroading and who gained prominence together. One was Sir William C. Van Horne and the other was John M. Egan. Van Horne is now one of the leading men of the Dominion of Canada. He was for many years president of the Canadian Pacific railway and is yet connected with the company in a high official capacity. Egan is the president and general manager of the Georgia Central road. Many years ago when the Southern Minnesota extension was being built Van Horne was superintendent and Egan was chief engineer of the company. They worked together in building the road. Then Egan was absorbed by the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul company. Van Horne went to a higher position, and Egan became superintendent of the system. A few years later Van Horne went to the Canadian Pacific and became superintendent of the system and Egan went to the Chicago and North Western west of Winnipeg. Egan then came back to the States, and was chairman of the General Managers' association during the exciting Chicago time. I saw that Van Horne is to be interested in Cuban railways. I remember the prediction that Egan would be associated with him in handling the properties.

Threatened in Northwest.

The time was when the representatives of the Pacific coast arguing for more money for coast defenses, for more yards and battle ships used to talk about the "sound of the morning and evening guns of Esquimault being heard across the entrance of the great inland sea of Puget sound," also "that the great wall of the United States in commerce and civilization was erecting fortifications whose frowning fronts loomed across the peace of the Pacific." And in time they got money for their fortifications. The navy yard at Mare Island was made second to none. Great ship building interests were established on the coast and the best battle ships of the navy were built there. A navy yard, it is becoming, a drydock, was located in Puget sound, albeit it happens to be located in a most out of the way place and far across the water from Seattle and Tacoma, and for several years we heard little or nothing about the "frowning front" of the fortifications of Esquimault or the "great inland sea of Puget sound." Now, however, on issue, and some of our friends here for that these fortifications are a threat to the peace of the Pacific coast and our Alaskan possessions.

Would Move Them Off.

It is interesting to note that my old friend, James B. Montgomery of Oregon, who is known east and west as a great bank of great capacity, was a prominent alarmist regarding the "frowning front" of Great Britain. "I would like to see," he used to say, "the British fleet here in Washington. I would like to tell her to get off the coast." "She would not take the hint," he would say, "of British North America. She would take that bordering on the coast because it would want to be there. We ought to tell England that her fortifications at Esquimault and Halifax are meant for no other purpose than a menace to us, a threat that we resent. We would pay her for her property, and pay her well."

BUT WE OUGHT TO SAY THIS CONTINUED IS OURS TO DO WITH AS WE PLEASE." It would seem that the spirit of Montgomery lives in those who would make the growing fortifications on the Pacific coast a cause for a serious diplomatic dispute, if not an international entanglement. ARTHUR W. DUNN.

The Crack in the Mirror.

Sir Noel Paton, the painter, enjoyed almost as wide a celebrity as a joker as he did as an artist. An encounter he had with a physician in Yorkshire, with whom he was on the most intimate terms, is an instance in point. Sir Noel was the physician's guest. His drawing room boasted of a magnificent mirror, which reached from floor to ceiling of the lofty room.

One morning while the guests were assembled in the room one of them noticed a large crack near the top of the mirror. The physician was horror-stricken and asked question after question in an effort to discover the culprit. Perplexed and sorrowful, he stood looking at the shattered glass when Sir Noel asked that a stepladder be brought that he might examine it more closely.

Mounting, he drew a rag from his pocket and hastily ran it across the supposed crack, when, lo and behold, it disappeared! He explained that, having come down earlier than the rest of the guests, he procured a ladder and a bar of soap and indicted the seemingly irreparable injury.

Actresses Paint Their Faces.

"It is a mistaken idea that actresses are as a general rule handsomer on the stage than off," writes Franklin Fyles in The Ladies' Home Journal. "The reverse is as likely to be true. Nevertheless all theatrical faces have to be painted. It may be assumed safely that none of the complexion is genuine. An exceptionally clear and pink skin may require no falsity. A dark one may chance to suit the character to be assumed. But these exceptions to the rule are rare. The glare of artificial light would make most faces ghastly white or unpleasantly sallow if bright hues were not laid on. The art of coloring a pretty visage just enough and not overdoing it is one which all actresses should learn. Many do not, and so we see beauty disfigured instead of enhanced. Others are very expert. There are two distinct processes. One makes use of colored powders applied dry; the other mixes the same powders with grease, making a substance called grease paint."

A Magic Observer.

Here is a story with a moral: A countryman had just returned from a journey to Paris. One of his cronies asked him what opinion he had formed of the Parisians.

"Delightful people," he replied, "but frivolous, changeable and altogether incapable of forming an attachment of any duration."

"How long were you there?" asked his friend.

"Three days,"—Chicago News.

Testimonial From Judge Gaston.

GREENVILLE, Ala., Aug. 10, 1899.

I take great pleasure in certifying to the purity and the merit of Wilkinson's Matchless Mineral Water. This natural mineral water, to my personal knowledge, is taken from a well three miles east of Greenville, in the exact condition in which it is sold. I have seen this water used, with wonderful success, for dyspepsia, indigestion, sore eyes and for eruptive diseases, sores and ulcers on man and animals. As a remedy for these troubles, I do not believe its equal exists. It is highly recommended by physicians for a number of diseases.
